Dear Allen:

As you are undoubtedly aware, the launching of a reconnaissance satellite by the United States is now under active consideration. To assess the political implications of this project policy officials in the Department have urgently requested initiation of a Special National Estimate addressed to the following questions:

- (a) What would be likely Bloc and free world reactions if the Soviet Union discovered that the United States was covertly placing inspection satellites in orbit? Would the USSR try to destroy the satellites in question?
- (b) What would be Bloc and free world reactions if the United States overtly placed in orbit inspection satellites which (i) maintained photographic coverage of only Bloc countries? (ii) maintained coverage of all countries?
- (c) Would these reactions be altered (i) if the United States placed the information thus obtained at the disposal of the UN? (ii) if the United States had first offered to cooperate with the USSR and other nations in organizing a multilateral inspection satellite system on behalf of the UN?
- (d) If continuous photographic coverage of the Bloc were being secured, what effect might this have on Soviet policy, e.g., with respect to disarmament and the initiation of surprise attack.

Mr. Allen Dulles, Director,
Central Intelligence Agency,
Washington, D. C.
